

Helen Lake Frozen in Lassen Volcanic

Contributed by Daniel Hienzsch
Sunday, 24 August 2008
Last Updated Monday, 25 August 2008

{multithumb caption_pos=disabled} Leaving the central valley of California, the temperature, which had been hovering between 90 and 100 degrees dropped. Fast. By the time I had passed through the entrance into Lassen Volcanic National Park, there was snow everywhere and many of the lakes and ponds still had sheets of ice covering them. This panoramic photo is of Helen Lake, just before the Bumpass Hell trailhead.

There are four individual image slices that comprise this final panorama. The final full file is about 30MB with final printed size of 33" x 11". All images were taken with my trusty Canon A520.

{multithumb thumb_height=100 resize=0}

View Large Panorama \(1,685KB\): Helen Lake